Business Names

Emergency Services Fact Sheet

Business names have always been a problem for the emergency services and no supplier of address data, whether local authorities, the Ordnance Survey or the Royal Mail have ever been able to provide a consistently accurate and up to date source.

Our database of over 2 million business names is available to emergency services on corporate licenses, which means all departments can benefit.

We have sourced a constantly updated database, which we supply to the Emergency Services along with monthly updates. The data is designed to reflect real life scenarios i.e. the name above the door, not the parent company and not a simple postal address.

It will be exportable into Command & Control Systems for better responses to both 999 and 101 calls and has extensive uses throughout intelligence systems for determining risk, carrying out inspections and better allocating resources.

With updates available every month, another advantage is the ability to identify new businesses, which in addition to mobilising, gives an opportunity for those new businesses to be targeted as part of community engagement, such as the organising of fire safety checks.

The data will also be supplied with the business type, which will allow for better risk assessments. Certain business types will attract more crime or be at a higher risk of fire, so knowing specifically where these are will enable a better deployment of resources and a reduction in future risk.

With This Data You Can:

- More accurately and more quickly respond to incidents
- Use the business types to better identify risk
- Import it directly into your gazetteer - no need for matching!
- Enhance AddressBase Premium
- Ensure that you know about businesses that require site visits
- Identify agricultural buildings that have been converted to business premises
- Have a system to identify new businesses
- Ensure that the UPRN remains the 'golden thread'
- Export into other systems or access via web services
- Receive change only updates, which can be seamlessly imported
- Integrate into GIS
